ABSTRACT

A bibliography on Asian and Pacific American studies programs is presented. The listing contains 36 papers, articles, and reports on Asian and Pacific American studies programs for students, instructors, educational administrators, and researchers. The articles primarily deal with Asian American studies programs and not with scholarly work in the field. The articles do not focus on activities of Asian American student organizations. Information on sources of information on Asian American programs is included. Items available through ERIC are noted. (SW)

Bibliography on Asian American Studies Programs in Higher Education

Introduction

Since the late 1960's, Asian American studies programs have been developed at many colleges and universities, especially in the West. However, these programs often receive little attention in discussions or investigations of ethnic studies programs in higher education. This bibliography has been compiled to identify available papers, articles, and reports on Asian Amerian studies programs for students, instructors, educational administrators, researchers, and others who might be interested in ethnic studies programs or in educational issues related to Asian and Pacific American groups.[1]

Some of the titles in this bibliography may be difficult to obtain except through the use of interlibrary loan procedures. Several titles are papers presented at the annual meetings of the National Association for Asian and Pacific American Education (formerly the National Association for Asian American and Pacific Education); many of these may be obtained from the Japanese American Curriculum Project.[2] Titles which are part of the Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC) document system are so identified. Copies of these may be ordered through the ERIC Document Reproduction Service.[3] Also, several hundred libraries and other organizations have collections of ERIC documents on microfiche.[4]

In conclusion, a few additional sources of information on Asian American studies programs will be mentioned. A number of programs have produced materials which describe their activities. Currently, the Asian American Studies Program at the University of California-Berkeley publishes an occasional newsletter, "Asian American Report,"[5] and the Asian American Studies Center at the University of California-Los Angeles publishes a quarterly newsmagazine, Cross Currents.[6] Asian American community newspapers are another source of information on Asian American studies programs.[7] Often these can be found at libraries which have extensive Asian American collections.[8] Finally, the Asian American Studies Library at the University of California-Berkeley[9] and the Asian American Studies Reading Room at the University of California-Los Angeles[10] have numerous materials on Asian American studies programs.[11]

FOOTNOTES

1. The articles listed in this bibliography primarily deal with Asian American studies programs and not with scholarly work in the field of Asian American studies. For a good introduction to the latter, see: Wang, L. Ling-chi. "Asian American Studies," American Quarterly 33 (1981): 339-354. Also, the articles listed in this bibliography do not focus on the activities of Asian American student organizations, though such groups may have close working relations with Asian American studies programs. For an introduction to Asian American student activism, see the articles on this topic in East Wind, 2 (Fall-Winter 1983).
